Well, it has some interesting new features. First off, the new title features new levels and the ability to play as Ada Wong, the game's character that you don't play as in the original. Ada Wong is voiced by Nanae Chrono, who you might recall played Zero in Zero Escape: Virtue's Last Reward. Next up is new weapons and enemies that will be exclusive to the remake. Guns like the L-6 are completely new, as is the pig-faced G-Virus. Resident Evil 2 Reborn will support both the Wii U and PC versions, with all the content available for download on both. Here's the official synopsis for Resident Evil 2 Reborn: RE2B is a standalone fan-made title. It is not part of the official series. It is an independent PC/Mac/Wii U remake of the 1991 original. It is not an official remake of the PlayStation or Saturn releases. It will use the same engine as RES and it's planned to use the same engine as RE1, RE3, RE4 and RE5. RE2B focuses on the storylines of the novel. The first chapter is entirely new. It is inspired by the comic book but it will not be a prequel or sequel. It is a standalone game and it is not canon to the official series. I'm the person who convinced my high school that was a good idea. They were calling it a 5-year anniversary in a few weeks, but in their defense, I only convinced them to do it in 3. I can't believe they waited that long. I never planned for it to be such a big deal. I just thought it would be cool to have a retrospective on 5 years of our work, so I suggested it. I also suggested they have some kind of party, because it was supposed to be the big deal in the end. I'm not entirely sure how I went about convincing them to agree with that. Anyway, we had our retrospect last week, and it was a little bit sad, and a lot of fun. We made a lot of things over the past 5 years, and I'm glad we did. I always like looking back and thinking about the things we made that we're proud of. I've always said that I love working with my co-workers, and those events definitely proved
